RAISED $22,735 AT DEDICATION OF NEW CHURCH

Handsome New St. James Church
Dedicated on Sunday in Presence of Large Audience. Remarkable Display of Liberality when Subscriptions were Asked.

With impressive ceremonies and a remarkable display of liberality, never before equalled in Gettysburg, St. James church—handsome, dignified, and spacious—was on Sunday dedicated in the presence of audiences which filled the large auditorium.

While the dedicatory services were the event to which the people of St. James and of the town in general had looked forward for over a year, the raising of a sum amounting to almost $23,000 toward the debt of the church was the distinctive and remarkable feature of the day.

At the morning service after an eloquent sermon by Dr. J. A. Clutz, the financial statement was read by Prof. H. Milton Roth. It showed that the total cost of church and parsonage with furnishings had been $50,560.47 and that of this $17,459.48 had been raised leaving a total yet to be secured of $33,100.99. Of this amount $17,500.00 is covered by a mortgage and $15,600.99 debt above the mortgage remains.

It was stated by Dr. Clutz who took charge of the soliciting that they hoped during the day to raise this latter amount and when the evening service closed it was found that not only this had been done but that over $7,000.00 additional had been promised.

In opening the campaign for subscriptions Dr. Clutz asked for some one who would volunteer to give $1000.00. There was a slight pause until William Grecht, of Baltimore, known by very few in the congregation, walked to the front of the church and announced that he would give that sum. It was such a surprise that the audience apparently forgot they were at a church service and spontaneous applause followed. Mr. Grecht was a member of the Primary Department of St. James Sunday School in 1861. He was a poor boy for some years but later went to Baltimore where he was very successful in the canning business and takes great delight in contributing to religious movements.

Following Mr. Grecht's liberal gift eight men arose and promised gifts of $500. Four $300 gifts followed, with a number of $200 and $150 promises and then a call was issued for $100 subscriptions. These came in great numbers and it was some time before Dr. Clutz announced that they would receive gifts of $50. Again there was a liberal response and after all these had been taken over $13,000.00 had been secured.

A pause in the receiving of individual subscriptions was taken then to hear from the various organizations. C. S. Reaser announced that the classes of the Sunday School had agreed at the morning service to contribute $2000.00. Mrs. M. E. Zinn promised $1000.00 for the Mite Society which has already done extensive work, including the carpeting of the church. The Brotherhood promised $800 and the Christian Endeavor $250. The Infant Department of the Sunday School had given $213 earlier in the service while the choir gave $175. Amounts of $25 and less were received before the close of the service and the total subscriptions for the morning reached $19,080.00.

At the evening service the campaign was again renewed and the total was run up to $21,226.00 before it was decided to stop. At this point Mr. Grecht, who had contributed the $1000 at the morning service, arose and said it was just six minutes to ten and that he would duplicate all subscriptions made between that time and ten o'clock. Instantly there came two subscriptions of $25 each. Two $10 gifts followed and before the time had expired $50 had been secured. Mr. Grecht announced that he would duplicate this with $10 additional making his total for the $1,600.00. C. S. Reaser promised to raise $250.00 additional which brought the total for the day to $22,666.00 and to this was added $69.48 basket collection bringing the grand total to $22,735.48. Of this amount $1124.97 was cash.

A demonstration again occurred at the close of the unusual six minutes and lively applause resounded through the church. A Chautauqua salute was given Mr. Grecht and Miss Annie Wolf who, he declared, had brought him to Gettysburg for the dedication. Earlier in the day Mr. Grecht had noticed the condition of the Sunday School library and gave instructions that it be filled with new books and the bill sent to him. He also gave $10 to the Infant Department.

While the raising of this large sum of money was the feature of the day it in no way eclipsed the deep religious significance of the dedicatory services.

At the morning service at half past ten every seat in the church, with a seating capacity of eight hundred, was occupied. Included in the audience were a large number of the older members of the congregation who had been brought in automobiles of the various members. Among these were Mrs. Mary Menchey aged 95 years, the oldest member.

The choir sang "Lift up Your Heads" from Handel's "Messiah" and the congregation united in the responsive reading and the "Gloria." Suitable hymns in which all joined heartily were sung and Scripture lesson was read by Dr. H. C. Alleman, the Bible used at the dedication of the old church in 1848 again being used. Rev. J. B. Baker offered prayer and the sermon was preached by Dr. J. A. Clutz who used as his text Matthew 26: 8, "To what Purpose is this Waste?"

Dr. Clutz compared the erection of the present structure with the Mary's gift of the ointment to the Savior. He justified both on economical, sentimental and religious grounds and in the course of his sermon told of the various inconveniences of the old church and parsonage. The fact that the congregation has grown to 810 and the Sunday School to about 600 were included to, together with the great satisfaction of having a modern parsonage to replace the old. While talking of some of the unpleasant features of the old house Dr. Clutz turned to Dr. Steak for verification of his remarks and he assented remarking,

"Yes, but it was a dear old home just the same."

Dr. Clutz's earnest sermon was followed by the congregation repeating the Lord's Prayer and after a solo by Miss Ruth Clutz "Open the Gates of the Temple," the soliciting campaign above recounted was taken up. At its conclusion a message from Dr. Joel Swartz was read expressing sorrow at not being able to be present. Dr. Swartz is just now recovering from an attack of double pneumonia. Rev. Dr. Baker turned over the keys to the trustees, the congregation joined in the Apostle's Creed and the prayer of dedication, and the morning service ended with "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow" and the benediction.

At the evening service there was an anthem by the choir and the congregational singing was again a feature. Dr. A. R. Steck, of York, preached an earnest and forceful sermon on the text, "Upon this Rock I will Build My Church," and after receiving the subscriptions all joined heartily in singing "Joy to the World," closing a day of gladness and happiness not only to the people of St. James but to all the people of Gettysburg to whom the erection of the beautiful new structure means anything.

And to appreciate the beauty of the new church one must visit it and view it for many minutes. The interior of the main church auditorium with its rich furnishings, its handsome windows, its beautiful lighting facilities and all the other accessories make it an interior which may well be called one of the most handsome and attractive in this section of Pennsylvania.

The chapel, in use for some months, grows in favor every week and on Sunday housed large audiences at Sunday School and Christian Endeavor services where the spirit of dedication was much in evidence.

A few facts concerning the church are of special interest. The architect was A. A. Ritcher, of Reading, and he was ably assisted by Mr. Eiler. The contractor was W. H. Johns. The plumbing was done by William D. Armor, the cut stone work by Luther Beiler and William Ziegler and the plastering by Harry Yeagy. The windows were furnished by Henry B. Hankinson, of New York. Charles A. Timmins, of Gettysburg, did the electrical work; John Hartley, of York, the concrete work. William Bushman had charge of the painting. The pews were made by the Dittmar people of Williamsport; the electrical fixtures for Sunday School and basement by the Reading Chandelier Works and for the church by the Reliance Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia. The planing mill work was provided by the Hollinger Planing Mill Company of Waynesboro; the bricks by the Auburn Shale Brick Company of Gettysburg; the iron work by the Lancaster Manufacturing Company and the rolling partitions by the Wilson Manufacturing Company of Norfolk, Virginia.

Services will be held this evening and Tuesday evening in the church auditorium at half past seven.

CLASSES HOLD ANNUAL SCRAP

With Regular War Paint on their Faces Freshman Charge upon Sophomores and Succeed in Binding Every Opponent.

Nixon Field on Saturday witnessed the exciting tie-up between the Sophomore and Freshman classes, the contest which has supplanted the barbarous midnight rush in which the two classes formerly participated at the opening of the school year. Outnumbering the Sophomores almost two to one the Freshmen completely vanquished the second year men and actually succeeded in carrying every one of them off the field. The final score was 74 to 14.

Preceding the tie-up was the tug-of-war between two teams of ten picked men. This the Freshman team won in two pulls and the attention of everyone was then directed to the big event of the afternoon.

Taking the east end of the field the hundred or more Freshmen lined up, their faces and hair covered with a brilliant red chalk which made them look like so many Indians. The mark was for the purpose of preventing confusion and having the newcomers tie up their own men. At the other end of the field were the Sophomores, few in number comparatively, but even more determined. All on both sides had a good supply of rope for the fray.

At the sound of the pistol the two opposing parties rushed pell mell down the field at each other, meeting in the center where the fray was at once on. Tumbling each other to the earth the various men set to work to bind hand and foot as many of the opposing force as possible and when so secured they were carried back of the goal line and counted. Only a few Freshmen were carried off, the Sophomores being too busy defending themselves to use much time in offensive work and when time was called at the end of twenty minutes it was found that every Sophomore had fallen victim to Freshman strength and prowess and was safely stowed away.

The affair was presided over by members of the Senior and Junior classes in fantastic costume. Clowns, police, and laborers mingled with gaily bedecked "co-eds" in an effort to prevent unnecessary roughness and they were very successful, only one participant being at all hurt and he so slightly as scarcely to be worth mentioning. Photographs were taken of the two classes and the squads of umpires and referees, and a crowd of interested spectators added to the success of the event.

The victory gives the Freshmen no rights or privileges. The caps, buttons, stripes and all remain where they have been since the opening of college.

OROZCO CAPTURED

Rebel Leader Crosses Into Texas and Is Arrested.

Washington, Sept. 16.—Unofficial advices were received here that General Orozco had crossed the border into the state of Texas and had been captured by Captain Mitchell, U. S. A. General Steever, commanding the American forces at El Paso, telegraphed the war department that this rumor had reached him, but that he was unable to confirm it. He added that he had sent reinforcement to Marfa, Texas, where Captain Mitchell is located.

T. he report caused a great deal of commotion. It is the general belief that if the report be true and Orozco is in the custody of the United States army, that the collapse of organized revolution in the north of Mexico is at hand.

According to the report of Orozco's capture, he was driven across the border by federals, who pursued him and his force after a hot engagement.

TO OPEN CANAL NEXT YEAR

Fleet to Go to Colon This Winter Before Water Is Turned On.

Washington, Sept. 16.—The Panama canal will be opened to traffic in the fall of 1913.

This statement was made officially at the navy department in Washington with an announcement that the Atlantic fleet would be rendezvoused at Colon this winter before the water is turned in. The navy's estimate is based upon the latest report from the army engineers.

Secretary Meyer, after consulting with the isthmian canal commission, discovered that construction work on the canal had progressed so far that, unless action was taken immediately, there was a probability that the men of the fleet would have no opportunity to examine the connecting link between the two oceans before it was in operation. The visit of the fleet will include railroad trips to the men throughout the canal zone.

St. George's, Del., Sept. 16.—William H. Cooper, Jr., of New Castle, and Dennis J. Horrigan, of Wilmington, narrowly escaped losing their lives when Mr. Horrigan took a wrong road toward the Chesapeake & Delaware canal in the machine and plunged in head first, tying up the canal several hours.

The men were coming north and, mistaking the light left the road to the bridge and went into the water at a depth of twelve feet.

John C. Crumpton and Charles C. E. Statist, who had run after the machine when they noticed the course it pursued, assisted in saving the two men from drowning.

A wrecking crane was sent to the scene and the machine hauled out and traffic resumed, after a delay of more than five hours to the boats bound to and from Philadelphia.

M'CREA SEES PROSPERITY

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 16.—James M'Crea, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, visiting relatives in the city, said the country is entering a period of prosperity that promises to be the most profitable era in the history of the nation.

Of the business situation he said: "It is gratifying to everyone. Prosperity is here. Everybody can see that. The pulse of the whole country is beating to the rhythm of happy times. The bumper crops and the fact that the farmers will not be compelled by financial stress or other causes to realize quickly on their harvests, will give stability to the prosperity and will not start the car shortage that invariably follows rush business in crops."

DISAPPEARED WITH $8000

Declares He Will Not Prosecute and Attempts Blackmail.

Philadelphia, Sept. 16.—Charles M. Wessels, president of the C. M. Wessels company, advertising, 927 Arch street, said that he would not prosecute Stanley W. Eisenbrey, secretary of the company, who disappeared with $8000 of the company's money a few days ago, even if Eisenbrey were arrested.

Mr. Wessels added that if Eisenbrey would return and face the music he would take him back into the corporation and allow him to make up the deficit by working it out.

Mr. Wessels says that he is sure Eisenbrey was being blackmailed by a woman in New Orleans and that the woman threatened to turn over certain letters to his wife if money was not forthcoming. Mr. Wessels said, the woman turned the letters over to Eisenbrey's wife.

When Eisenbrey disappeared he took with him a loaded revolver and $10. Mr. Wessels thinks that he will commit suicide rather than face the consequences.

According to Mr. Wessels, Mrs. Eisenbrey has said that she has washed her hands of her husband; that she will bring suit for divorce in a few days, and when the divorce is obtained she will sell off her furniture in her home in Logan and go to live with an aunt in Canada.

Mr. Wessels said that Eisenbrey's father called him up and in speaking of the case the elder Eisenbrey said that the best place for his son was the graveyard, and that he never wanted to see him again.

The Logan home of the Eisenbrey is encumbered with a mortgage of more than $2000. The mortgage is held by Mr. Wessels, who says that he will give the wife time to make her preparations complete before he forecloses on the property.

In an interview Mr. Wessels said that he had placed full trust in his partner, who was only thirty years old. Wessels said that he had never asked him any questions at any time in regard to him the business was getting along. At one time he said he was in Chicago and Eisenbrey sent him a telegram asking for the loan of $100 to meet a bill. Wessels wired back: "Your request is granted." Another time Eisenbrey came to him and asked for the loan of $60 to pay his taxes. This Eisenbrey also got. "Taken in all," said Mr. Wessels, "I guess Stan owes me $600 outside his pecuniations, but if he will come back he can pay me back when he gets a chance."

HARMONY IN FLOWERS

ARTISTIC ARRANGEMENT CALLS FOR CONSIDERABLE SKILL

Lines and Colors of Stems and Blossoms Form the Dominant Center of Interest in the Flower Pictures

Any display of cut flowers in a receptacle should make a picture in which the lines and colors of the stems and blossoms form the dominant center of interest. Success in the making of such a picture is very easy if one will be content with simplicity and naturalness, but it becomes increasingly difficult as one strives after complexity and artistic finish.

In all pictures certain harmonies are to be desired. In flower pictures, the chief of these are the harmonies of line and color. The harmonies of line are determined by the habit of growth of the plants used and the forms of the leaves and blossoms. The simplest way to secure beauty in this respect is to confine the display to one type of flower, and see that the lines of the stems and blossoms conform to the lines of the receptacle. Thus a few large roses on long, straight stems may be displayed to great advantage in a tall, cylindrical vase, while smaller roses on shorter, more fragile stems are much more effective when shown in low, broad rose bowls.

Harmony of color in a flower arrangement requires simply that the flowers placed together shall not be of discordant tones, and that they shall combine attractively with the color of the receptacle. The latter is, indeed, of the greatest importance in the making of the flower pictures, for, if not simple in form and modest in color, it will spoil the beauty of any flowers with which it is used.

Pottery jars and vases useful as flower receptacles may be had in an almost bewildering variety of sizes, shapes and colors, and at a great range of prices. The more costly forms are not by any means always the most beautiful, and one can often get, for a few cents, jars of good form and color that serve admirably for holding flowers.

As regards form, two chief types of flower receptacles are needed in any home where cut flowers are tastefully arranged—the tall and slender and the short and broad. The first are necessary to display the graceful lines of lilies, irises, gladioli and other slender long stemmed flowers; the second to show to advantage roses, peonies, asters, sweet peas and other short-stemmed blossoms. Of course, various intermediate forms can be used to advantage for such flowers as daffodils and other types of the narcissus, but, in general, the most useful jars belong to the tall or the broad type.—Suburban Life.

IN POMPADOUR PINK CREPE

Copyright, by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

The gown, which is of pink crepe, pompadour style, has a lace overskirt. The hat has a crown, of black crepe tulle, with ruching and velvet loops and strings.

The Directoire Period.

The parasol with a pointed peak is the latest novelty. It is made of a fancy silk with a very wide lace border. This peak sunshade is light and small, and will be seen a great deal at seaside resorts this season, the original idea of its manufacture being that it is a convenient form of shade to carry by followers of the simple life, who go hatless in the summer.

Another sunshade owes its origin to the directoire period, hence its name. The handle suggests the canes carried by men, and the style evidently was originated to carry out this idea. When folded up this sunshade can be carried like an ordinary cane, which the ladies of the directoire period affected.

This sunshade is of white silk with a broad black velvet band and black and white silk fringe.

Effectually Aroused.

A large, perspiring individual entered a subway train at one of the uptown stations yesterday afternoon, squeezed himself into a seat between two women and promptly went to sleep. He nodded, he swayed from side to side with every motion of the car, and at last, to the secret delight of every passenger opposite, began slowly but surely to lay his head on the shoulder of one of the young women beside him. At this juncture the unexpected happened. Without even raising her eyes from her paper the young woman reached into her bag with one free hand, drew forth a small silver vinaigrette of smelling salts and carefully placed it under the sleeper's nose. There was a rumbling sound, followed by a series of sneezes, and the man sat bolt upright, blinking in bewildered fashion, while the car echoed with laughter. The only person who took no part in the merriment was the young woman, who calmly replaced her vinaigrette and went on reading. The man remained wide awake for the rest of the trip.—New York Times.

Wanted It Complete.

Several days ago a housefurnishing shop on Chestnut street, west of Broad, had a display of bathroom supplies in their window. In one corner was a bathtub. Over this was hung a portable shower with a sign attached which read, "Complete, $10." A man came into the store and said to the salesman, "I'll take the shower." The latter was rather surprised that such a seedy-looking individual would make such a purchase and said, "We do not send these 'C. O. D.'s." "That's all right," he replied, and took a ten-dollar note from a roll of bills. In the course of the day the shower was delivered to a certain address. The next day a little girl came into the shop, and, giving the address of the purchaser of the day before said, "We got the shower all right, but my father wants to know where the bathtub is." The firm sent for the shower and returned the $10 bill without comment.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Pump for Horn Players.

The patient German inventor has produced a new labor-saving device; this time it is meant to make easier the work of the man who plays a wind instrument.

To maintain at the lips an air pressure required for some wind instruments is fatiguing. Besides this the necessity for taking breath once in a while makes it almost impossible to render properly long passages full of sustained notes.

Hence the inventor has devised a machine operated by the foot which conveys air under pressure by a tube to the mouth of the player. It would be, of course, impossible to attach the tube from the bellows directly to the instrument, since it is by the mouth that character is given to the sound. But the musician using this invention will have his mouth constantly filled with air, and can breathe in through his nose without interrupting his flow of music.

AVIATOR MET DEATH ON HIS LAST FLIGHT

Intended to Quit Flying Because of Danger.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 16.—Howard Gill's death at Chicago in a midair collision of flying machines came after his announced intention of giving up flying.

Young Gill had become impressed with the danger of aviation and had already made up his mind to quit. Had he survived the fatal flight he would never have ascended again.

Two weeks or more ago, in a letter written to his brother, Royal Gill, he declared that he was through with flying.

"It's only a question of time," he said, in effect. "I'm going to quit before it gets me."

Under the care of the brother to whom he wrote these words, his body is being brought to his family in Baltimore. It will be taken immediately to the home of his brother, M. Gill, at Roland Park, where the funeral will be held.

Mrs. Alice Gill, mother of the young aviator, arrived in Baltimore from Atlantic City, where she had been since the early spring.

Royal Gill, a brother of Howard, was in Chicago and was present on the aviation field when the accident occurred.

Howard Gill seemed born for a life of thrills and sensations. As far back as 1904, when the automobile speed mania first struck the country, he became affected by the craze and has always been anxious to go into all sports where there was a real risk of life.

The presence of Snead in Amarillo was not known until after the shooting. Boyce returned only recently. The shooting occurred within a block of the business quarter on the principal street. Shortly after the shooting, Snead surrendered to the police, giving up an automatic shotgun and two automatic revolvers.

Approximately a score of buckshot took effect in Boyce's side. Snead would give out no statement and he waived a hearing. Further developments in the case await the action of the grand jury.

ROSENTHAL GUN-MEN CAPTURED

Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood" Caught.

FOLLOWED THEIR WIVES

New York Detectives Traced Them to Hiding Place in Brooklyn—Hidden There a Month.

New York, Sept. 16.—"Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood" were arrested at 756 Woodward avenue, Brooklyn, by Deputy Police Commissioner George Dougherty and a force of detectives.

The two missing "gunmen," so long sought for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, are now at police headquarters, Manhattan, and there is no doubt of their identity.

The two men were arrested in company with their wives and a visiting pickpocket in a flat which they furnished about Aug. 15, and when they were covered with the revolvers of the police their only comment was: "Ah, hell; put up your guns; we won't make no trouble."

Scarcely another remark was made to the police by either man until they were examined at police headquarters later by Assistant District Attorney Moss, acting for District Attorney Whitman, who has gone out to Hot Springs to take testimony of persons who talked to Sam Schepps, a witness in the case.

The women, however, made a scene, throwing their arms around their husbands' necks and shedding copious tears. They had to be torn away from the men before the police could get their prisoners out of the apartment, and were later brought to police headquarters.

With the arrest of "Gyp" and "Lefty," whose real names are Harry Horowitz and Louis Rosensweig, all of the seven men accused of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, of which Police Lieutenant Charles Becker is the alleged instigator, are now in the hands of the authorities.

The capture of the two men came as a result of what is regarded in police circles as the best detective work done in the history of the department. It was the fruit of unbroken surveillance of the wives and relatives of the men since their disappearance on the day of the murder, July 16.

This surveillance was maintained by sixty detectives working in relays, who kept Deputy Commissioner Dougherty in constant touch with what they did and where they went.

Commissioner Dougherty said that "Gyp" and "Lefty" had fled immediately after the murder to Parkville, N. Y., a summer resort in the Catskill mountains, and had remained there more than a week. His men had traced them back to New York by their baggage checks, but had lost them at the Hoboken terminal.

Where they were between July 26, the date of their arrival and Aug. 15, the commissioner has not definitely determined. Neither gunman appeared to be in funds, "Gyp" having only $18 in his possession.

GET ALLEN CLANSMEN

Arrest Leader and Nephew of Gang Which Shot Up Court.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 16.—Sidna Allen, leader of the Allen clan, which shot up the Carroll county courthouse at Hillsville, Va., on March 14, killing Judge Massie and others, and his nephew, Wesley Edwards, are manacled in cell at the city jail as a result of a love affair which led to the deaths of them. Both men have announced their willingness to return to Virginia without requisition.

Edwards, for the love of whom Miss Maude Iroler, of Mount Airy, Va., innocently led detectives out to Des Moines, was captured as he was returning to his boarding house, after having worked all day with a paving gang.

Just as he boarded a street car, detectives and officers surrounded him. Edwards was trying to escape by crawling through the front end of the car when the officers caught him. The arrest of Sidna Allen was effected earlier in the day.

A visit to Edwards to Miss Iroler in her Virginia home about a month ago and the accidental loss of a letter put the detectives on the trail. The fugitives had been in Des Moines since April 28. Allen, under the name of Tom Savre, worked as a carpenter and Edwards, under the name of Joe Jackson, was employed with a city paving gang.

Allen was arrested at the home of John Cameron, at Eleventh and Locust streets, where he and his nephew had been rooming, by Detectives Baldwin, Lucas and Mundy, of Roanoke. The arrests occurred a few minutes after Miss Iroler stepped into the Cameron home to meet Edwards, whom she was to wed.

BLOWN UP AS HE WRITES LOVE LETTER

Lovesick Youth Sits on Keg of Powder.

Indiana, Pa., Sept. 16.—Stung to the quick by the gibes of his companions while he was writing a letter to his sweetheart, Lloyd Reithmiller, aged eighteen years, son of George Reithmiller, a wealthy coal operator of Smicksburg, went to the powder house at the mine and, sitting down on a keg of powder, started to write his love epistle.

Reithmiller had been in the house but a few minutes when there was a terrific explosion, and he was lifted through the air and landed 150 feet away in a creek. He was literally torn to shreds.

Reithmiller had been in the powder house but a short time when a terrific explosion shook the neighborhood and the powder house disappeared. George Harding, a friend, hearing the detonation, ran to the spot where the powder house had stood and began looking for Reithmiller. After some time he located the injured boy in the creek, a blackened mass of flesh, with his clothing burned away.

It is not known what caused the explosion. Reithmiller did not recover consciousness, and nothing could be ascertained, as no one was near the powder house at the time of the accident.

The boys who had been taunting young Reithmiller about writing to his girl, left the mine office and went home, when the lovesick lad decided to finish his letter at the mine house.

R. R. POSTAL CLERKS RAISED

Increase Will Be Ordered by Postmaster General Hitchcock.

Washington, Sept. 16.—Promotion for 13,000 postal clerks on Oct. 1 will be provided in orders to be issued by Postmaster General Hitchcock.

In the railway mail service there are 16,700 clerks, and a majority of those not promoted on Oct. 1 will receive more pay before the end of the current fiscal year. More than $1,000,000 will be expended in making the promotions.

Although more than $1,000,000 a year will be involved in the increase it will cost the government no more. Postmaster General Hitchcock has perfected a plan to save that amount by a rearrangement of railway mail car space and the amount the government pays annually to the railroads.

William D. Haywood Arrested.

Boston, Sept. 16.—William D. Haywood, general organizer of the I. W. W., was arrested here on a charge of conspiracy in connection with the big textile strike at Lawrence last winter. The arrest was made after Haywood had delivered a speech on Boston Common in which he urged a general strike as a protest against the imprisonment of Eltor and Giovannetti at Lawrence.

More Marines Land In Nicaragua.

Washington, Sept. 16.—Admiral Southerland reported from Nicaragua that the cruiser Cleveland has arrived at Corinto. Her landing party, numbering about 150 bluejackets and marines, has been sent to Chindegua, a former revolutionary stronghold, on the line of the railroad between Corinto and Leon.

"I suppose I looked depressed at his answer; indeed the prospect of a lonely evening in my rooms with such a mystery in course of solution outside, seemed oddly distasteful to me. It is a rough district, as you know," he said, watching me; "but would you care to come along?"

"There is nothing I should like better," I answered simply.

"Well—it's against the regulations; but they allow me some license. Be ready at nine, and I will call for you. Wear old clothes, a cap and a scarf round your neck to hide your collar. Is that understood?"

"Yes," I said, and so it was settled between us.

We were punctual in our meeting, and trotted eastward over the roads we had covered on the previous day. When we stopped it was at a narrow rift in a wall of mean dwellings. We dismissed the cab and threaded our way down the alley, which opened out upon a miserable square. The houses that surrounded it had once been of some pretension. In a simpler age merchants had doubtless lived there, men who owned the tall ships that had lain in the river near by. But now the porticos had crumbled, the iron railings had bent and rusted, the plaster had fallen in speckled patches from the walls. In the center a few ancient trees still dragged on a disconsolate existence. It was a silent place where wheeled traffic never came. And when, through an upper window, a woman suddenly poured forth shrill abuse upon a drunken man clinging to the railings, each oath rang loudly in the furtive silence.

As we paused at the mouth of the alley, a tall man, with a drooping yellow moustache, brushed by us; and when we turned into a beer-house at the corner he followed us, standing a little apart in an angle of the bar.

There were half a dozen men and women—of the life wreckage of the great city—sitting on the benches; but before the inspector was served with the drinks he ordered, they had whispered one to another and melted away. As the last one slunk through the door, Peace beckoned to the tall man, who joined us.

"Well, Jackson," he said, "you can't hide your light under a bushel in Steptey, that's certain."

"I'm afraid not, sir," he grinned.

"Leastways not in Maiden Square."

"Well, have you found the place? Oh, that is all right," for the man had glanced at me with a brief suspicion. "This is Mr. Phillips, who has been of much service to me in our little affair; let me introduce you to Sergeant Jackson, Mr. Phillips."

I shook hands with the sergeant, who said that he would take a glass of beer.

"And the place?" asked Peace, when we had seated ourselves on a corner bench out of earshot of the man behind the bar—a bottle-nosed ruffian, who watched us furtively as he rinsed the dirty glasses.

"That's the address, sir," said the sergeant, handing his superior a crumpled sheet of paper.

"A club, is it?" he said, glancing up in his quick, bird-like way. "And what sort of a club?"

"Foreign, sir. They call themselves social democrats, but our special branch men tell me that a full half of the crowd are anarchists, and such rats as that. I think it must be so, for Nicoln and his Russians have had the place under close observation for weeks. And you know what that means, sir."

"Yes, I know what that means." "Amaroff was not a member, but used to drop in there from time to time. He was very thick with the man who runs the place, Greatman, as he calls himself. They tell me that Greatman sat as a model for some statue he was doing, back in July. It must have been a funny sort of statue, for Greatman's a weedy little Pole, and drinks like a fish."

For some time the inspector sat in silence, drawing circles on the floor with the point of the light cane he carried. The bartender dropped a glass, swore, and then, with a stare at us, retreated into a little cage he had at the back of his domain. Doubtless the presence of detectives was no incentive to trade in the bars of Maiden Square.

"This Greatman—what more do you know of him?"

"We have had nothing against him before; but all the same, it's his private room that has the sanded floor." The inspector's prophecy of the previous night came back to me with a sudden remembrance: "Amaroff was murdered in a room with a sanded floor, probably at no great distance from Leman street, seeing that they carried him there in a coster's barrow." I began to understand the morbid significance of the private room in this little foreign club.

We were drawing nearer to our game; the scent was growing stronger. Addington Peace leant a little forward, with a twist in his jaw that raised a ripple of muscles under the skin.

"Continue, if you please," he said. "The room is at the rear of the club, and there is a back staircase to a yard behind, where costers store their barrows when not in use. It fits in with what you told us to inquire for, don't it, sir?"

"Yes."

The inspector's stick recommenced its interlacing circles on the floor; and we sat and watched, as if thereby he were disentangling his sordid story. So still were we all that the bartender poked his luminous nose from his cage in the hope that he had gone. He withdrew it with remarks on the police force which were distinctly audible, and opposed to the complimentary. Suddenly the inspector turned to me with a motion of half-apology, as if at the neglect of a guest.

"There are times, Mr. Phillips," he said, "when evidence runs in absurd contradictions. Observe the present case, in which you are so good as to interest yourself. We have it from the Russian police that Amaroff is their man, and that in their opinion—they being well qualified to judge—he was murdered by Nihilists. We now learn that he was apparently an intimate terms with Nihilists, and we have good reason to believe that he was strangled in one of their clubs. What do you gather from that?"

"They discovered his treachery, and took an excusable revenge," said I. "A sound conclusion. And now let us suppose that Amaroff was not a police spy at all; being, in fact, a dangerous Nihilist. What then?"

"Why set yourself such a puzzle?" "Not for amusement," he said, with his quiet smile. "And now I propose a little experiment. You must introduce us to this club, Jackson; the door-keeper will know you, and pass us in. Afterwards you will go to the back entrance in the yard you spoke of, and wait. It should be easy to conceal yourself."

"Yes, sir. Am I to stop Greatman if he comes out?"

"No. Stop nobody. We had better be going."

The square lay desolate and lonely in the bleak moonlight. We crossed it, and stopped at a house in the shadows of the farther side. At our knock a slide flew back, and, in the gush of light, a hairy face examined us curiously.

"Vat is et?" he said.

The sergeant stepped forward and whispered. The man was sufficiently satisfied, for he dropped the slide at once, and the door swung back to admit us; the hairy-faced porter bowing a welcome in polite submission. The inspector led the way up the stairs, and I followed at his heels. The sergeant had disappeared.

It was a broad, low room in which we found ourselves, the rafters of the roof hidden by the plaster of a ceiling. Round the walls on benches ranged behind tables a dozen men sat smoking and drinking. The chatter of talk faded away as we entered. In silence they stared at us, calmly, judiciously, without fear or curiosity. I could not have imagined a more composed and resolute company. I felt that I carried myself awkwardly, as an impertinent intruder should; but the inspector sauntered across the room to a bar on the further side as calmly as if he were the oldest and most valued member in the club.

A pale-faced man with a stained and yellow beard rose from his seat behind the glasses. His eyes were fixed on Peace with a weak, pathetic expression like a dog in pain.

"Good evening, Mr. Greatman," said the inspector. "Can I have a word with you?"

"Yes, sir, if you will kindly step into my private room," he answered in excellent English, opening a hatch in the bar. "This is the way, sir, if you will follow me."

We walked after him down a short passage and stopped before the darkness of an open door. A spurt of a match and the gas jet flared upon a bare chamber, hung with a gaudy paper and furnished with half a dozen wooden chairs set round a deal table in the center. In place of a carpet, our feet grated upon a smooth sprinkling of that grey sand which may still be found in old-fashioned funnels. It was here then, if the detectives were not mistaken, that this crime had found a climax, this sordid murder not thirty hours old.

"If you would like a fire, gentlemen," suggested Greatman, "I can easily fetch some coals."

"Pray do not trouble yourself," said the inspector, politely. "My name is Peace, of the Criminal Investigation Department, and I called to inquire if you can tell me anything concerning the murder of the sculptor, Amaroff."

"I know nothing."

"That is strange, seeing that he was strangled in this very room."

"Here?" cried the Pole, with a stare of unbelief changing into sudden terror. "Here—in my room?"

"So I believe," said Peace.

The man swayed for an instant, grasping at the back of a chair, and then dropped to the ground, moaning, his face covered with his hands. In that crouching figure before us was written the extremity of despair.

"Come, come, Greatman, pull yourself together," said the inspector, tapping him kindly on the shoulder. "If you are innocent, there is no need to make all this fuss."

"It was Nicoln who led to me," he cried, looking up with bewildered eyes. "Very probably," said Peace, "it is a habit with him."

"Yet it was I, miserable that I am, who made the meeting between them. Before Heaven, it was with the innocence of a child. If those my comrades of the club but knew—"

He hesitated, his eyes searching the room in sudden terror.

"Oblige me by seeing that we have no comrades already at the keyhole, Mr. Phillips," said Peace.

There was no one at the door; no one in the dark passage; and when I returned I found that Peace had lifted the caretaker to a chair, where he sat in a crumpled heap.

"You can trust us," the detective was saying. "Believe me, Greatman, it will be best for yourself that you hide nothing."

And so with many fierce cries and protestations, this poor creature began his story.

It was Nicoln, it seemed, who had discovered that Greatman, the caretaker of the Brutus Club, was one and the same with the forger, Ivan Kroll, of Odessa, who had been wanted by the Russian police for close upon twelve years. But having a shrewd head on his shoulders, Nicoln made no immediate use of his knowledge. For formerly a man might be extradited from England. Once in Russia the charge would be altered to nihilism, and then—Siberia. It was not pleasant for the caretaker of a nihilist club to be at the mercy of a black-bearded spy lounging on the step outside. "It was that which drove me to the brandy," said poor Greatman, alias Kroll.

About the end of August there began, he continued, a duel of wits between the two men, Amaroff and Nicoln, the reasons and causes of which did not, if he might be permitted to say, concern us. Nicoln's career was dependent on his success. For him, failure meant permanent disgrace. Yet it was Amaroff who was playing with his opponent as a cat with a mouse, confusing and surprising him at every turn, driving him, indeed, when time grew pressing, into desperate measures. At the last he formed a plan, did Nicoln, a scheme worthy of his most cunning brain.

"This, then, he did," ended the poor caretaker. "He came to me—I who had so great love and honor for Amaroff, my friend, I whom he had turned from crime and added to earn a wage in honesty—he came to me and he says: 'Kroll, in my pocket is a warrant that will send you back to the snow places in the East; do you fear me, my good Kroll?' And I feared him. 'See, now,' he said, 'we desire to see your friend Amaroff for a little talk. We cannot harm him here in this mad country. Contrive a trick, bring him into your private room behind the bar. Give us the key of the yard door that we may come secretly to him—and afterwards you will hear no more of Siberia from me. Do you consent?'"

"Gentlemen, I believed him, also having fear of the snow places; and I consented."

"So Amaroff answered my call, and with some excuse I left him in this room. It was at a time when few members were in the club—about seven of the clock. And that, as I live, is all I have to tell. I waited at my seat behind the bar. I saw nothing, heard nothing—and at last when I went to my room, behold it was empty! I tried to suspect no wrong—but I did not sleep that night. In the morning I saw in the papers that Amaroff, my friend, was dead, and how he died I could not tell."

"So Nicoln won the game," suggested Peace, softly. "And there will be no regrettable incident when the Czar enters Paris the day after tomorrow."

"Of that I have no knowledge," said Greatman; but I saw a sudden resolution shine in his face that seemed to put new heart into the man.

"Well, Mr. Phillips," said the inspector, turning upon me with a warning quiver of the left eyelid, "it is to meet Nicoln at the studio by seven tomorrow morning. We must get to bed early."

"Certainly," I said. I was rather out of my depth, but I take myself this credit that I did not show it.

"Then do you search the studio tomorrow?" asked Greatman.

"Yes—it has been arranged."

"But will you not first arrest this Nicoln, this murderer?"

"My dear Mr. Greatman," said the inspector, "you have told us your story, and I thank you for your confidence. But I advise you now to leave things alone. I will see justice done—don't be afraid about that. For the rest, please to keep a silent tongue in your head—it will be safer. There is still Siberia for Ivan Kroll just as there may be dangers from your friends in the club yonder for Julius Greatman, who arranged so indiscreet a meeting in his private room. Good night to you."

The caretaker did not reply, but opening the door, bowed us into the passage that led to the big room. We had not taken half a dozen steps when I looked back over my shoulder, expecting to see him behind us. But he had vanished.

"He's gone," I whispered, gripping my companion by the arm.

"I know, I know. Keep quiet."

As we stood there listening, I heard the sudden clatter of boots upon a stairway, and then silence.

"It appears to me that we shall have an interesting evening," said Addington Peace.

A twist in the passage, a turn through a door, and we were rattling down the back stairs and out into a moonlit yard. In the denser darkness under the walls I made out a double row of big barrows, from which there came a subtle aroma in which stale fish predominated. From amongst them a tall shadow arose and came slipping to our side.

"He's off, sir," said the sergeant, for it was he. "Rushed by, shaking his fist and talking to himself like a madman. Where has he gone, do you think?"

"To Amaroff's studio; and we must get there before him. The nearest cab-rank, if you please, Jackson."

We ran through the yard, hustled by the narrow streets, lost ourselves, as far as I was concerned, in a maze of alleys, and finally shot out into a roaring thoroughfare, crowded with a strolling population. No cab was in sight. Opposite the lamps of the underground station the inspector stopped us.

"It would be quicker," he said, with a jerk of the head, and we turned into the booking-office and galloped down the stairs. Luck was with us, and we tumbled into a carriage as the train moved away.

We were not alone, and we journeyed in silence. Station after station slipped by, until at last we were in the southwestern district again. My excitement increased as we fled up the stairs of the South Kensington station. Here was a new sensation, keen, virile, natural; here was a race worth the trouble it involved. I did not understand; but I knew that on our speed much depended. Indeed, I could have shouted aloud, but for the influence of those two quiet, unemotional figures that trotted on either hand.

I regretted nothing—an hour of this was worth a year of artistic contemplation.

At the corner we found a hansom, and soon were rattling down the King's Road. When the cab stopped, to the inspector's order, it was not, as I expected, at the corner of Harden Place, but a street preceding it. Down this we walked quickly until we came upon a seedy-looking fellow with a red muffer about his neck, leaning against the wall.

I was surprised when we halted in front of him.

"Good evening, Harrison," said the inspector. "Anything to report?"

"They're there, sir. They came about ten minutes ago. Job and Turner are watching the door in Harden Place, and I came here."

"They didn't see any of you?"

"No, sir, I am sure of it."

"You had better join the others in Harden Place. Keep within hearing, and if I whistle, kick in the side door of the studio—it can be done. There is a man who I fancy will have a key to the door that is due in about five minutes. If I have not whistled before he arrives, let him through. You understand?"

"Yes, sir."

The detective faded discreetly into the darkness, while the inspector turned to me.

"There may be complications, Mr. Phillips, and no slight danger. I must ask you to go home."

"I shall do nothing of the sort."

"Mutiny," he said; but I could see that he was smiling. "You are rather a fraud, Mr. Phillips—rather a fraud, you know. There is more of a fighter than a dilettante in you, after all. Come, then, over you go."

A jump, a scramble, and all three of us were over the wall, dropping into a ragged shrubbery of laurel. We groped and stumbled our way through the growth of bushes until we emerged on a grass plot. Then I understood. We were at the back of Amaroff's studio. On one side where we stood was the outhouse, its sloping roof reaching up to the long windows under the eaves—the upper lights, as sculptors call them. And even as I looked there came through these win-

CARLOAD OF LIME AFIRE

A car loaded with lime consigned to the P. H. Glatfelter Paper Co., Spring Grove, caught fire in the mill yards on Friday and caused much excitement for a short time. The mill fire department was called out and when a stream of water was turned on the lime and car, the lime began to slake, and it was with some difficulty that the blaze was extinguished. The fire, it is believed, started from the Thomasville Stone and Lime Company. The greater portion of the lime was rendered useless and the car was damaged to some extent.
